Prices depend on rarity of the species, scarcity of seed, and the difficulty of collecting.

The number of seeds given is only approximate, but usually in excess.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR SOWING SEEDS

Berried seeds and boney seeds may take two years to germinate, though a few may come up the first year. They should not be thrown away until after that time is past.

Rhododendrons, and others of this family are best sown on a compost of half peat, loam, and some sand, — all sifted finely, — the surface made quite firm. A good sprinkling of sphagnum moss, which has been dried and sifted, should be scattered on the surface, enough to cover it completely; then, watered with a fine spray, — the seed sown on the surface, and kept moist until germination.

All other fine seeds are better sown in this way, although the proportion of peat may be leaf soil instead. The seeds, also, may be given a light covering of sifted sphagnum. There is seldom damping when sphagnum is used.
